This Sunday we celebrate the Solemnity of All Saints. This is the feast day for all the souls in heaven that do not have a specific feast day in the Roman Calendar. We know that there are an uncountable number of people who are now praying for us in heaven, and All Saints Day is an occasion for us to remember those we have who continually intercede for us before the Throne of God.

On Monday, we celebrate All Souls Day. On this day, the roles are reversed, and we pray for those who are in purgatory on their journey towards heaven. You may have seen a prayer card or another source that says something along the lines of "-+carries a partial indulgence of 100 days …". This has created a wrong impression for many people. This does not mean a specific number of days in purgatory, but rather that prayer or act has the same spiritual value as that number of days of penitential living.
